CAN WE DO IT? WHAT WILL IT TAKE?

ABSTRACT:

Kati Haycock, Director of the Washington-based Education Trust, will share national and state achievement data, describing patterns for different groups of students. She'll discuss some of the factors that contribute to significant gaps separating poor students and students of color from other young Americans, but concentrate mostly on sharing the lessons from schools and districts that have been successful in raising achievement for all students.

BIOGRAPHY:

Kati Haycock is one of the nation's leading child advocates in the field of education.

She currently serves as director of the Education Trust. Established in 1992, the Trust does what no other Washington-based education organization seeks to do—speaks up for what's right for young people, especially those who are poor or members of minority groups. The Trust also provides hands-on assistance to educators who want to work together to improve student achievement, pre-kindergarten through college.

Prior to coming to the Education Trust, Haycock served as executive vice president of the Children's Defense Fund, the nation's largest child advocacy organization.

A native Californian, Haycock founded and served as president of The Achievement Council, a statewide organization that provides assistance to teachers and principals in predominately minority schools in improving student achievement. Before that, she served as director of the Outreach and Student Affirmative Action programs for the nine-campus University of California system.
